

Lee Miles

I am an associate professor with the School of Textiles and Design, teaching predominantly interior design and interior architecture at Undergraduate and Postgraduate levels.

I am also the School's Director of Learning and Teaching (having been in this role for the past three years) and as part of this role, I am also the Schools Director of Academic Quality.

In my four and a half years here, I have been involved in numerous different projects and initiatives and have greatly enjoyed working with a range of staff from within our School and the University.

I am keen to have the opportunity to further represent the School of Textiles and Design. I bring with myself the experience of working throughout the School and representing the School from a learning and teaching, and quality, perspective, the invaluable experience of collaboration between Schools and departments within the University, the global experience (where I taught overseas before joining HWU and also through working with our Dubai Campus) of being an international educator, and in general, the knowledge of all the nuances and subtleties of our School of Textiles and Design.

I hope for the opportunity to represent the School of Textiles and Design at Senate.
